Excerpt: ... CHAPTER III. THE ROUTE FROM THE DESERT OF ET-TIH TO HEBRON AND BETHLEHEM: BY THE WAY, ON THE EAST, OF WADI ARARA (AROER); AND ON THE WEST, OF WADI EL KHALIL. E have already had occasion to speak of the two routes which lead from the Sinai Peninsula into the southern part of Palestine. One of these is that which was taken by Seetzen, and which passes by the wells of Bir es Seba, the Beersheba-of Abraham: the other lies somewhat farther eastward, and was the route taken by Robinson, von Schubert, Russegger, and others. It leads over the outlying ranges of hills to the outlying mountains, whose height continually advances, and which form the natural southern frontier of the Promised Land. After passing that barrier, we reach a country entirely different from that on the south, with different physical aspects, and with a different population, and we are fairly introduced to Palestine. It is at the parting of the two roads--the one of which runs westward from the neighbourhood of Arara (Aroer) towards Gaza, and the other of which runs northward to Milh (Malatha, Moladah)--that the first decided change in the character of the scenery occurs in the eastern route, while in the western it may be traced in the tract lying between the well of el-Khuweilifeh and the high village of Dhoheriyeh. Russegger took very careful observations to determine the gradual increase in elevation as we advance from the desert of Edom to the high mountain-land of Judaea. The results of his inquiries, briefly stated,¹ are as follows: 1 Russegger, in Poggendorffs Annalen, vol. liii. p. 186. El-Khulasa (the ancient Elusa),
