Excerpt: ... CHAPTER III. IN THE HEART OF A GERMAN FAMILY. Although pension-life has its charms and advantages, it does not answer the purpose either for acquiring the language or mingling in German society. With all its delightful companionship, it must be relinquished; and, to make the winter in Germany yield its greatest usefulness, you must go right into the heart of a German family. Here, no English will be heard,--none is understood; and one is therefore obliged to venture boldly into the unknown and perilous depths of the German speech. The German language requires this total surrender, and even then demands that you walk in the valley of humiliation. It is impossible for one who has not had the painful experience of struggling with the German in its own home, to know its bitterness. Strange sounds on all sides; strain ear and imagination as you may, still, hearing, we hear not, and in us is fulfilled the prophecy, by hearing ye shall hear and not understand. A little light breaks as the words are acquired; but there are so many words,--so many colloquial phrases not seen in grammar or book,--and even the German-Americans, whose parents have always compelled them to speak German in the American home, feel that their German is limited in the land where it is the universal tongue. We have heard of various systems to teach one German in six weeks, in six months;--remarkable systems! Mark Twain gives it thirty years; he could well, even then, have termed it a Thirty Years War. We determined to conquer it, and, remembering, he best can rule who first hath well obeyed, we surrendered ourselves wholly to the German and all its stern behests,--determining to know no other master, no other interest, naught else for the time being. One thing is in our favor in Germa...
